

The patchwork building, situated in a formal industrial neighborhood of Munich, is a response to the changed living and working conditions during the Covid pandemic. The project is created in teamwork with Hadil-Ornella Khuri and is mentioned on the university website.

The Patchwork Building consists of modularly structured cluster apartments, which offer modules for living and working, as well as community areas and outside spaces, all arranged alternately. Around the fixed sanitary cores and within the thermal building envelope, the inhabitants are free to organize and restructure their living spaces any time, depending on individual needs. The aims are to adapt one's home to home office work, while separating living spaces from working spaces and, at the same time, strengthening the sense of community within the housing complex.
